Course Description: This course surveys the research associated with the physical, emotional, social, moral, and mental development of children from infancy to adolescence. Educational theories and theorists provide the back drop for research review. A review of the literature pertaining to psychological factors that influence instruction, learning, self-regulation and management, assessment and motivation, complements the expectations of the course.

Field experience is required.

Learning Outcomes/Objectives:

Students in this course will

- Identify and describe the major theories (and theorists) that have impacted the study of child development, educational psychology and teaching/learning.
- Identify and describe factors/issues associated with academic success and/or risk (i.e., language acquisition, culture, gender, socioeconomic status, varying exceptionalities and mental illness).
- Analyze underlying views of the cognitive process, including an investigation of brain research.
- Understand how motivation affects learning; explore the concept of "mind set."
- Examine the importance of school culture and the learning environment.
- Recognize the significance of the teacher in the classroom.
- Understand the variables associated with student behavior, self-regulation, engagement, classroom management and discipline.

- Apply knowledge through simulated classroom activities and case studies.
- Analyze and adapt the understanding of conceptual ideas to a form appropriate to the developmental level and learning style of the student.
- Develop an appropriate artifact for the professional portfolio.

Learning Strategies: Students who participate in this course will engage in lecture, group discussions, individual assignments, collaborative learning and other instructional methodologies.

Topic reviews (three) chosen from titles listed in the outline; students prepare a summary/review of the topic. The reviews support class discussion and are submitted for a grade.

The oral presentation researches an assigned theorist and provides information to the class on the ideas/theories for which the person is best known and the influence/impact the theory has on teaching and learning. The presentation is approximately 10 – 12 minutes in length and will employ creative, appropriate use of technology and/or teaching strategy.

A comprehensive Bibliography of the research to support the presentation is submitted for a grade.

The presentation and Bibliography are submitted as a portfolio artifact to be incorporated into the professional portfolio.

Field experience includes a brief summary of the date, time, place, location, number of students in the class visited, etc., a summary of the observed classroom environment, the lesson presented and a review of instructional strategies presented in the lesson. The classroom observation form guides the summary. A final reflection page notes reaction to and impression of the observation.

The “best possible thoughtful questions” are written for a class of students (choose the grade and age). The questions, at least three, should 1). Put the students in a position to succeed; 2) release responsibility for learning to the students; 3). Allow for positive student interactions; and, 4). Allow students to collaborate with their peers.

Requirements/Assessment:

Class attendance, participation, collaboration (including reading of materials for discussion)	15 points
Written topic reviews (three @ 5 points each)	15 points
Oral presentation of theorist/written bibliography	30 points
Field observation and reflection	30 points
Thoughtful questions	10 points
Total	100 points

Please Note: All written assignments are typed, double-spaced, in appropriate grammar/sentence structure, and follow APA rules.

Students reach personal goals and course outcomes through regular and prompt attendance. The Education Department’s accelerated classes are intense and rigorous and demand student presence and participation.
