Prerequisites: EDUC 300, 311, 342, 430

Texts:

Harry K. and Rosemary T. Wong. (2009). The First Days of School: How To Be An Effective Teacher. Mountain View, CA: Harry T. Wong Publications.

A series of readings from the following authors' texts may be made available to all students:

Suggested:

Alfie Kohn. (1996). Beyond Discipline: From Compliance to Community. Washington, DC: ASCD Publications.

Thomas Lickona. (1992). Educating for Character. New York: Bantam.

Learning Outcomes/Competencies:

This course invites the teacher candidate to view the management of the classroom from a broad perspective. That is to say, this class will not merely focus on the understanding and possible application of given “programs” for classroom management (to use a more tradition term, “student discipline”) but on a more holistic approach to classroom management, taking as its cue the noted educator Harry Wong’s threefold perspective on the “effective teacher.” This is the perspective wherein the effective teacher succeeds as teacher by developing the inter-related skills of positive motivation, planning and executing lessons for mastery, and managing the learning environment. Furthermore, the teacher candidate will be asked to come to understand and evaluate various programs or models of classroom management as to their effectiveness and consonance with her/his philosophy of education. This will be done in the light of Alfie Kohn’s understanding of classroom management as an exercise of building an educational community. Finally, the student will be asked to come to understand and apply to lesson planning Thomas Lickona’s belief that “educating for character” should animate one’s educational efforts.

In this sense then, Bloom’s taxonomy of educational objectives, both from the cognitive (especially “evaluating”) and affective (especially “valuing”) domains will figure into the achievement of course competencies.

Thus, in this course, the student will:

Come to understand that employment of various management strategies reflects an implicit philosophy of education. Educational value judgments can and do “fuel” management practices.

Come to observe, understand and evaluate the effectiveness of various management strategies employed by veteran practitioners in the field by way of field experience.

Come to understand and evaluate the effectiveness of the holistic Harry Wong claims for the nature of the “effective teacher” as motivator and classroom manager by way of text and video analysis accompanied by evaluative discussion in the light of timely educational research.

Demonstrate the ability to research and evaluate appropriate literature on effective management strategies.

In the light of the above, to come to an informed, personally appropriated and adequately defended position of one’s own perspective on classroom management.

INTASC Principles Applicable To This Class:

Standard #3: Learning Environments:

The teacher works with others to create environments that support individual and collaborative learning, and that encourage positive social interaction, active engagement in learning, and self-motivation.

Standard #9: Professional Learning and Ethical Practice:

The teacher engages in ongoing professional learning and uses evidence to continually evaluate his/her practice, particularly the effects of his/her choices and actions on others (learners, families, other professionals, and the community), and adapts practice to meet the needs of each learner.

IDOE Standard Applicable to This Class:

Standard 5: Elementary education teachers have a broad and comprehensive understanding of student learning environments and demonstrate the ability to establish positive, productive, well-managed, and safe learning environments for all students.

ACEI Standard Applicable to This Class:

Standard 3.4: Candidates use their knowledge and understanding of individual and group motivation and behavior among students at the K-6 level to foster active engagement in learning, self motivation, and positive social interaction and to create supportive learning environments.

Learning Strategies:

At this point in one's program of preparation for the teaching profession, the teacher candidate will have reached a certain maturity in understanding the art and science of teaching. Therefore, this course will, in many instances, seek to combine instructor input with carefully reflected discussion of the topics identified in the outline below. In other words, the course should take on the tone of a "seminar" where researched knowledge and educational values are shared in a respectful manner. Therefore, it is essential that all students read the assigned readings well in advance of the class and provide input to the seminar via timely research study. We will be viewing a number of videos from Harry Wong's series on the effective teacher. Wong's presentations - in tandem with correlated research - will serve as the basis for practical discussion during a section of the course.

Moreover, we will view selected video clips in order to come to understand the basic tenets of various popular programs for classroom management with a view to hold them up to Alfie Kohn's critique of them. This exercise will serve to stimulate the teacher candidate to take a personal and informed position not only on a management program but also on the underlying values grounding such a program.

Finally, we will spend the latter part of the course discussing Thomas Lickona's claim that education is a matter of skills and character development. Such an approach will serve to stimulate the development of sample "values education" lesson plans.
